COMMISSION GOVERNMENT IN MANY CITIES

List Furnishes Food for Much Study and Careful Examination.

The fact that Norwich, Conn., has this week voted to adopt a commission form of government makes it the first of the cities in Connecticut to adopt this system. In Massachusetts, Haverhill is probably the most strik-ing example of the success of the sys-tem. An article in the Twentieth Century Magazine for December sketches very definitely and interest-ingly the reforms and tangible beneits which have accrued to Haverhill by the new system, which has been in operation for two years. So rapid has been the growth of the commission system throughout the United States that President Eliot, in his occasional talks. casional talks to clubs and other street, audiences in this civinity on that subfect has said that he is no longer the ject, has said that he is no longer the man to discuss it, but that these clubs ought to apply to the mayors or other representatives of commissions in the many cities of the United States so governed. The extraordinary extent of this commission government is probably not at all appreciated by Massachusetts people. That it already embraces ninety-six cities, a number which will be increased to amination:

Houston. Next to Texas in number of commission cities stands Kansas, with only one less than Texas. Also very popular in Oklahoma is this idea. Thus we see the effect of a neighborhood contagion, one might say, for Texas, Kansas and Oklahoma are very closely related, both geographically and in the kind of population. Missouri, however, which adjoins Kansas, has but one commission city, St. Joseph, which is, however, one of the leading jobbing cities in the United States. In lowa it is said that the movement has really reached its culmination, as the places included there are all cities of the first class, includare all cities of the first class, including the metropolis and capital. Des Moines, which is probably the best governed commission city in the United States. Massachusetts, it will be observed, has five commission cities but there are the only ones so far in New England. The idea does not seem Minnesota—Mankate.
California—Berkeley, Modesto. Riverside.
Michigan—Port Huron.
Missouri—St. Joseph
It will be observed that Texas is the state in which the commission city is most popular. This is only natural considering the fact that the idea originated there at Gaiveston and originated there at Gaiveston and originated there at Gaiveston and originated there are some originated.

New England. The idea does not seem to have any popularity whatever, in the large states like New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Illinois. Even Wisconsin, foremost in insurgents, has but one city, and that not of the first rank. So the growth of the commission idea after all is somewhat sporadis, but it is also phenomenal, and originated there at Gaiveston and widely.—Boston Transcript.
